Now It Is Night

“Good morning! Goodnight!” These are two things most of us say every day to the people in our lives. For young children, the concepts of day and night are something they experience each and every day. Our next unit, “Now It Is Night” gives children the opportunity to explore these nighttime in more depth. From talking about how our world changes at night to exploring the activities we do to get ready for bed (e.g., brushing teeth/taking a bath), the activities planned for this unit will be very “real life.” Additionally, we will learn more about space and how it is during the night that you can sometimes see the moon, the stars and even planets. We will also talk about just a few of the animals that are active at night. It is going to be a very busy unit indeed!

Let's Be Friends

Our next unit, “Let's Be Friends,” is one you could really do at any time! The experiences in this unit are centered around what it means to be a friend as well as the many things friends like to do together. We will also explore how friends are different and this is what makes them special. This unit provides a wonderful opportunity for you to explore and reinforce the concept of diversity in a meaningful, hands-on way. There will be many experiences in this unit the children can do together...as friends. Just keep in mind that Toddlers, Twos and those with developmentally delayed social skills may prefer to play independently and this is appropriate. We will give you ideas on how you can adapt and modify as needed.
